A

GREEK AND ENGLISH

LEXICON;

IN WHICH

Are explained all the words used by the best Greek writers of prose and verse;
The secondary senses of a term derived by analogy from the primary, and the primary when doubtful deduced from one of the oriental tongues;

Each word, and, in general, its distinct senses, are justified by reference to the original authors;
The doubtful vowels in the explained word are marked as long or short.

INTENDED NOT ONLY FOR THE USE OF LEARNERS IN PRIVATE AND IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS, BUT ALSO FOR THOSE WHO, AFTER THE USUAL PERIODS OF EDUCATION, SEEK TO ACQUIRE A MORE ACCURATE AND EXTENSIVE ACQUAINTANCE WITH THE LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE OF ANCIENT GREECE.

PREFACE.

THE LEXICON which at length I offer to the Public, does not profess to contain all the words in the Greek language. I have, however, taken a range sufficiently ample; and provided not only for those who in private or in the public schools learn Greek, but also for those who, after the usual periods of school and college education, cultivate a fuller and more extensive acquaintance with its writers and literature. It contains, then, all the words which occur in the Iliad and Odyssey, and the Hymns ascribed to Homer;—in Hesiod, Theocritus, Pindar, Anacreon, Bion and Moschus;—all the words to be met with in Æschylus, Sophocles, Euripides and Aristophanes—together with a large portion of those comprehended in the Index of the Anthologia, edited by Jacob. The prose writers explained in this work are Herodotus, Thucydides, Xenophon, Polybius, Demosthenes;—the popular pieces of Plato, Aristotle and Theophrastus. To these I have added the New Testament, the Septuagint, Longinus, the voluminous productions of Lucian and Plutarch, the latter of whom has many hundred words peculiar to himself.

In interpreting the words of these authors I had their works constantly before me, which I consulted whenever any doubt presented itself to my mind. This Lexicon therefore must not be considered as a compilation from the labours of my predecessors, though it is but justice to own that I availed myself of all the aids which the best lexicographers are so well calculated to afford. Among these I gratefully acknowledge my obligations to the admirable Lexicon of Homer and Pindar, by Damm—to the no less valuable Lexicon of Xenophon, by Sturze—to the Lexicon Græcum Prosodiacum of Morel, edited and enriched with valuable notes by Dr. Maltby—to Schleusner's Lexicon of the New Testament—to Biel's Lexicon of the Septuagint, and finally to the Lexicon Polybianum annexed to the splendid edition of that author by Schweighæuser. Nor should I omit that I found the Græco-Anglicum Lexicon to Aristophanes, by Sanxay, very useful, though not always correct in its references, nor sufficiently literal and definite in its explanations.

In order to enable my readers to judge how far my labours merit their patronage, I shall now briefly point out the features which distinguish this Lexicon, and the objects I proposed to fulfill in the composition of it.

1. The words are arranged alphabetically, excepting that in a cluster of derived words the parent term is put in capitals at the head, and the rest follow in the order of their derivation.

2. Whenever the primary sense of a simple term has been overlooked or mistaken, the origin of that term is pointed out in one of the Oriental tongues.

The Greek language is necessarily of Asiatic origin; the Hebrew with its several dialects; the Chaldean, Syriac, Arabic; the Shanscreet and the Palèvi, or ancient Persian, alone contain the sources from whence it flowed. Nor is the man who is altogether unacquainted with these primeval languages more able to explain the sense of a primitive word in Greek, than a writer would be to explain the primitive words in English who is an entire stranger to the Gothic and Saxon, which are confessedly the parent tongues. The ancient lexicographers and scholiasts doubtless point out the true origin of many words; the theories of Damm, of Hemsterhuse, Lennep and Schneider, contain beyond dispute much solid matter, unfold many just and beautiful analogies. But a great portion of their etymologies is a heap of rubbish, which enlightened criticism, and an adequate knowledge of the Oriental languages, cannot fail to scatter on the wind. The true use of correct etymology is, that it furnishes the means, and indeed the only means, of ascertaining the primary sense of a term; and when this sense, like the root of a tree, is found, its ramification into secondary senses is easily pursued, the principle of connection between them is discovered, and the memory, instead of being overloaded and perplexed with different and discordant significations, is conducted through an easy and agreeable variety, all springing from, and connected with, a common stem. In illustration of these positions, I might in general appeal to the tenour of this work, or in particular to such words as ατη, βατισια, σκαμανδρος, κυνουρος, κυρβις, μωλυ. But I should not do justice to the subject if I did not here produce one example as illustrative of my meaning.

The verb ιαπτω in Septem contra Thebas, 301, signifies to hurl or fling at. In verse 526, it conveys the idea of dropping or bowing down the head. In the Supplices of the same poet, verse 96, it means to dash, and carries an allusion to the thunderbolts of Jupiter, hurled by way of punishment at the head of those who violate his laws. The same verb in Nicander Ther. 116, denotes to chastise; while in the Ajax of Sophocles, 501, it carries the idea of reviling or reproaching: and finally, in verse 710, its obvious import is to instruct. Dr. Blomfield in his elegant and useful edition of the Septem contra Thebas, 286, has the following glossary. Ιαπτω, jacio, Hesych. ιαπτειν, σπαραττειν, αικιζεσθαι, lege αραττειν. Absurde Etymologus ab ιπτω ducit, melius vero ab ιος, p. 464. 6. vide infra, 521. 540. Agam. 512. 1551. sensu petendi vel attingendi, Supp. 96. Sophocl. Ajax, 501.—In this article we see exemplified the learning and labour necessary in a Lexicographer. But no attempt is made by this distinguished scholar to reconcile the discordant senses of the word, or to resolve them into one common idea; but the reader is left to view them apart and unconnected, as the several limbs of a body torn asunder and scattered around him on the ground. This, however, could be done by only recurring to the origin of the verb, which is the Hebrew חבט, hibt, which means to beat down with a rod, such as to beat down apples or olives from a tree. Hence ιπτω, to strike, which Damm absurdly derives from πιπτω, to fall; also ιαπτω, the original guttural being dilated into ια, as is the case in many other instances. Hence the first sense which ιαπτω bears of beating or pelting, as in Septem, 301. The consequence of striking with a rod or any other instrument, is that the person struck should bend under the blow; and hence the idea of bowing the head in verse 527. The rod is the natural emblem and instrument of chastisement and instruction: thus ιαπτω without a figure, denotes to chastise or instruct, as in Ajax, 710. and Nic. Ther. 116. It is on this principle that rudis, the parent of our rod, is the parent also of erudio, erudite, erudition. The last meaning is to reproach or vilify, λογοις ιαπτειν, Ajax, 501. The analogy between to flog with a rod and to flog with words, is obvious; and what is to flog with words but to mangle a man's character, to abuse or vilify? Hence Hesychius, alluding seemingly to this passage, interprets it σπαρασσειν, to tear or mangle. Musgrave, however, would for σπάρασσειν read αρασσειν, which Dr. Blomfield also recommends: Musgrave then adds, Mihi Lexicographus corruptela deceptus videtur, qualis nunc Sophoclis locum deformat; ubi si scripseris λογοισι δαπτων, sermonibus mordens, nihil opus erit insolitas verbi ιαπτω potestates comminisci. Had verbal critics been philosophers in language, the pages of classical learning would not have been defaced and loaded with notes, rash, superficial, and puerile like this.

In illustration of the last sense of ιαπτω, it may be remarked, that terms denoting any violence or injury done to the body, are transferred in all languages to express violence or injury done to the character or mind. Hence διαβαλλω, which literally means to shoot through, metaphorically means to calumniate or vilify; κερτομεω, (to cut the heart, κεαρ τεμνω,) to reproach; σκερβολλω, Aristoph. Equit. 818, to rail at, in its primary sense imports to pelt with dung, σκωρ, or σκεαρ, βαλλειν, though Eustathius, not without the appearance of truth, derives it from εις κεαρ βαλλειν. The verb πηλακιζω, or rather the compound προπηλακιζω, is supposed to be derived from πηλος, clay. If so, its first and literal sense would be to daub with clay*. But analogy would then require it to be προπηλιζω: analogy therefore points to πελεκυς, a hatchet, as the real origin of the verb, and its primary signification would then naturally be to cut or hack with a hatchet, and metaphorically applied to reproach or vilify, as in Xen. Αν. 1. 2. 49. The verb νεικεω, or νεικειω, is without a change the Hebrew נכה, to smite, the parent also of νικαω, to conquer. Hence the phrase νεικεσσεν επεεσσι, Il. γ. 38, he lashed with words, reproved, rebuked.

*The ancients used πηλος, clay, as we do soap, to cleanse: hence the primary sense of προπηλακιζω would be to clean or purify. Demosthenes, page 315. l^s, has the phrase αποματτειν τῷ πηλῳ, to clean or purify with clay.

Διασυρω, to cavil or rail at, means in its primary sense to tear asunder or lacerate the body or limbs, as the simple συρω points to the Hebrew סור, which signifies to remove or tear away; and it is remarkable that our taunt is the Greek τενθω, which expresses the action of the teeth in biting or eating, the original of this last being דרן, in Persian and Shanscreet; the parent also of the Latin dens, and the Celtic dant. ἰψιαω, which Damm improperly derives from ἑπω, ἰψω, to manage, owes its origin to ἑψεω, to dress, boil, roast; hence ἐφεψιαομαι, κατεψιαομαι, Od. τ. 331. 372, which primarily convey the idea of dressing or roasting, mean, metaphorically, to assail a man with invective or abuse. With the same latitude the term roast is in vulgar use among ourselves. The verb σαρκαζω, or σαρκιζω, owes its birth to the noun σαρξ, flesh. Its appropriate sense, therefore, is to tear the flesh, as in the Peace of Aristophanes, ver. 481, or to lay bare the flesh, to skin, as in Herod. 4. 640. Its metaphorical sense is to snarl, rail at, taunt; hence σαρκασμος, the source of our sarcasm.

In the Persæ of Æschylus, verse 10, we meet with the unusual verb ορσολοπεῖται, which Dr. Blomfield with his usual learning thus explains in his glossary. Ορσολοποῦμαι, vexor, agitor, Hesych. ορσολοπεῖται, διαπολεμειται, ταρασσεται, Homer H. in Merc. 308. ἦ μὲ βοῶν ἑνεχ' ὧδε χολουμενος ορσολοπευεις; Poeta Alexandrinus περι καταρχῶν, 107, a Ruhnkenio laudatus. αιει κε πανημερον ορσολοπευοι μυθῳ ονειδειῳ, ἠ και πληγῇσιν ιαπτοι. Mars vocatur ορσολοπος, ap. Hephæst. p. 90. Photius, ορσολοπεῖν, λοιδορεῖν, πολεμεῖν.—It is singular that the origin of this verb should have escaped detection, as it is obviously from ορω, ορσω, and λοπος, peel or skin. Its primary sense therefore is to raise the skin with a whip; and its passive form, as used by Æschylus, would naturally denote the action of writhing under the lash, or of being agitated with violent emotions of pain or fear. But to return to the object of my Preface.

3. In tracing the secondary senses of a word from the primary, the same original idea is generally preserved through the several ramifications. See αγω, εχω, ερυω, καρπος, φερω, ποιεω, and the like.

It is a common notion that many words in all languages convey a variety of significations. But in strict propriety a term has but one sense, or at most but two, a literal and analogical sense. Every word on every occasion, presents the same idea; and it conveys different ideas only because it stands in different connexions. Thus in one connexion αχτη may mean bread, in another a shore, and with an accidental change of termination (αχτις) it denotes a ray of the sun. But in every place the word still means the same thing. For αχτη is αγετη, broken, from αγω, to break; corn broken is meal; broken ground or rock is a shore; and the broken, scattered light of the sun is its rays. So λεγω, to speak, and λεγομαι, to lie down, are still the self-same word. For it is the Hebrew לחק, to assemble or gather: to gather letters, or words, is to utter them; to gather myself for repose is to lie down. Thus a man when deposited in the grave may be said to be gathered to his fathers. But overlooking the primary sense of a term and the peculiarity of its context, we ascribe to the word itself what it owes to accidental associations. Hence interpreters almost on all occasions fall into the double error of distinguishing on one hand the senses of a word, when in reality there is no difference of sense, and of annexing to it, on the other, a sense that belongs to other words in the sentence. Damm, Sturze, and Schleusner, though the most accurate and the most learned of all Lexicographers, are continually chargeable with these two-fold errors, especially in explaining the prepositions and particles. The only correct and adequate way, therefore, of interpreting a word is in every step to preserve its original power, and to quote at least a part of the context. This I have generally done in italics, and then express the word and its context by one equivalent term in English.

4. Most words, and, in general, their distinct senses, are justified by references to the original authors. This indeed was a laborious task; but it was a task fully compensated by its utility. A lexicographer, in explaining the words of a dead language, can expect little weight or authority unless he appeals to those writers whose words he explains. The description of a term, abstractedly from its application, must necessarily be vague; and a view of it in the context where it stands, alone can define and fix it with precision in the memory. Besides, the author of a large work will be often found through haste, or weariness, or negligence, to be too general or incorrect, or even mistaken in his interpretation; and in every doubtful case a reference to the original will enable the reader not only to satisfy himself as to the sense, but also to supply what is defective, and correct whatever may be erroneous in the definition.

5. Greece consisted of provinces, in many respects, independent one of another. Each of these had its own standard of excellence in language, as in laws and institutions. Hence the same simple verb was split into distinct stems; or had stems of different origin, but of the same import, which became current in different places or at different periods; and out of which, by the same general analogy, grew branches peculiar to each. Thus ἔχω had also σχω, σχεω, σχημι, σχεθω; φερω had οιω and ενεγκω; αιρεω had ἑλω, and so on in a multitude of other verbs. Many of these stems in the progress of time became obsolete, while the branches which grew out of them were engrafted on the only surviving stem, and formed with it one large, irregular indeed, but united family. Now in this Lexicon the several branches of a verb are uniformly classed under their respective stems, and not, as has been usual with Lexicographers, under the roots used in the common tongue, and with which they have been amalgamated only by vulgar use.

6. The doubtful syllable in the explained word is marked as long or short. The accents, on the contrary, I have entirely omitted, as defacing the native simplicity of the language, and as requiring much sacrifice of expense and labour, without bringing in return the smallest advantage to the learner. I am happy to think that I am sanctioned in this omission by the example of Morel and Dr. Maltby, who retain only the circumflex, which I also have done.

7. The passive form of a verb in Greek, as is the case though less frequently in Latin, expresses a reflex as well as a passive sense: an inattention to this double power of a passive verb, has led Grammarians to feign the existence of a middle voice. This, however, is an idle fiction, which I shall entirely dissipate in my Analogiæ Græcæ. I have therefore throughout this Lexicon annexed to the passive voice, the reflex sense, as a sense inherent in, and most appropriate to it. Sturze, whose admirable Lexicon of Xenophon has conferred the greatest benefit on Greek literature, pursued an opposite course. On every occasion he expresses the middle voice distinctly from the other two, while he classes the passive under the active voice, thus widening rather than correcting the common error, which supposes the passive and the middle to be two distinct forms.

8. Though a Dictionary of a limited extent is not the place for critical discussion, yet on many obscure or mistaken passages in the writers whom I profess to explain, I have attempted to throw a new light, without noticing the opinions or errors of other critics. This will be found to be the case particularly in the New Testament, though I flatter myself it cannot fairly be objected to me that in any place I advocate religious notions of a peculiar or obnoxious nature.

9. Particular care has been taken in explaining the particles and the prepositions. Some of the former have been placed in a new light, while amidst the various senses under which the latter are applied, their strict and peculiar meaning is preserved and first stated. See αλλα, αρα, αν, &c. απο, κατα, &c.

Though this Lexicon, I fondly hope, possesses such excellence as may entitle it to the notice and patronage of the public, I am sufficiently sensible of its errors and imperfection. In extenuation of the omissions and mistakes that may occasionally deface it, I would plead the liability to err and to fail incidental to our common nature; the general character of usefulness and novelty that pervade the book; and the utter impossibility by any human efforts to produce a correct and perfect work on a subject so extensive and difficult as the Greek language. If the public voice approve of it in the main, no pains shall be spared in the revisal; the suggestions of enlightened and candid criticism will be thankfully attended to, redundances wherever discovered shall be retrenched, and defects supplied so as to meet the wishes and exigences of the humblest learner.

But a work worthy of this noble language and of the present enlightened age, must be much more extensive than one octavo volume; and as I feel an earnest desire to promote the literature and happiness of my country, I purpose to produce a Lexicon, Greek and English, in one large quarto volume, the character of which shall be the following:—First. It shall contain all the words of the language that may come within the range of my most diligent research. Secondly. The compounds shall be classed under their respective simple terms, and an alphabetical Index annexed. Thirdly. Every simple or primitive term shall be traced to its more ancient stem in one of the Oriental tongues, and the primary meaning thus obtained shall be followed through all its ramifications. Fourthly. Every word, and the several meanings of every word, shall be supported by specific authorities. Fifthly. The corresponding word in Latin shall be inserted before the English, for the purpose as much as possible of identifying the two languages, and to meet the wishes of those who have been accustomed to a Latin interpretation. Sixthly. Every useful aid will be sought from the Scholiasts, from the glossaries of Hesychius, Suidas, and other ancient Lexicographers: and finally, epithets that are synonymous with or opposite to the term explained, shall in general be stated, as one of the most useful and effectual means of defining the signification of a word.

The Lexicon I now offer to the public has cost me three years hard labour in composing and printing; and it will cost me the labour of five or six years more to finish that which I have in view. If it please the great disposer of all events to spare my life till I accomplish this purpose, I shall then have done my part to diffuse and perpetuate the knowledge of a language which has the highest claims on the attention of mankind, as being the fountain of all the blessings that enrich and adorn society, and more especially as the sacred depository of that revelation which is the fairest gift of God to man.

A Catalogue of the lost or minor Poets contained in the Anthologia Græca occasionally referred to in this work, may be seen prefixed to Maltby's edition of Morel's Lexicon, or to Brunck's Analecta, or annexed to the fourth volume of Jacob's edition. It is necessary, however, to notice here, that the ἀδεσποτοι (ἀδεσπ. or ἀδ.) mean the anonymous or uncertain epigrams contained in the last volume of Jacob's collection; scil. scilicet—sync. syncopè—opp. opposed or opposite.

GREEK AND ENGLISH.

Α, α, the first letter of the Greek alphabet, derived from the Hebrew א. In numbers α means one, first; subscribed (ᾳ) 1000.

In composition α seems an abbreviation of απο, from: and as to be from a thing is to be without it, α when combined with a noun or an adjective gives it generally a contrary meaning, and is therefore called α privative or negative: as θανατος death, αθανατος without death, deathless, immortal; βεβαιος firm, αβεβαιος infirm. If a word begin with a vowel, α becomes αν; as αἱμα blood, αξιος worthy; αναιματος, or αναιμων, bloodless, αναξιος unworthy. On the contrary, to be from a thing, is the means of increasing that thing; as a stream becomes larger, the further it flows from its source, or as the branches of a tree are larger, the wider they spread from the stem. Hence α increases the meaning of a term, and may be called augmentative or intensive: thus ξυλον wood, αξυλος very woody. In this sense α has much the meaning of μεγα or πολυ, and is synonymous with ἁμα together, of which as some think it is an abbreviation. This signification it bears in such words as ακοιτις, one who lies with another, a wife, from α and κεω to lie. So is αλοχος, one of the same bed, from α and λεκτρον a bed; αδελφος one of the same womb, a brother, α and δελφυς; ατalαντος one of the same weight, equal, α and ταλαντον a talent.

In Greek, as in Hebrew and Arabic, α is sometimes prefixed in the formation of nouns and verbs, and is a pleonasm; as ϝαχυς, ασαχυς; σφοδελος, ασφοδελος; μαυροω, αμαυροω; λαπαζω, αλαπαζω.

ἀ, ἄ or ᾶ, cry of admiration, astonishment, sorrow, reproach, ah, ha, ô, ho, alas.

ἀ Dor. for ἡ fem. of ὁ.

ἄ for ἑα, neut. plur. of ὅς.

ᾗ Dor. for ᾗ, in which way, where.

ἃ neut. plur. of ὅς, which things, quæ.

ἀᾶγης, ες, ους, not to be broken, stout, ponderous club, Od. λ. 574. α priv. αγω to break.

ααζω, f. ασω, I rise in vapours, exhale.

ααμος, ου, ὁ, exhalation, Chal. אוא.

ααπτος, ον, not to be touched or meddled with, uncontrolable, irresistible, Il. α. 567. α neg. ἁπτω.

ααοχετος, ον, not to be restrained, quite ungovernable, Il. ε. 892. for ασχετος.

ΑΑΩ, αατω, f. ααυω—ααυμαι, I mislead by blind desire—involve in guilt and misery, Il. τ. 91; aor. 1. m. ααασαμην, I was infatuated, behaved with folly and insult, ι. 116—was lost in mind, bewildered, 333—aor. 1. pass. ααασθην was ruined by blind zeal, π. 685. Heb. אוה desire, whence also aveo.

ααται, ης, ἡ, (for ατη, α being doubled to increase the negative sense, and pronounced with the digamma awatè) desire, guilt, injury, βλαβη, Pyth. 2. 52.

ααατος, ον, causing guilt and ruin by excess of indulgence, pernicious, Apoll. 1. 459.

ααατος, ον (for ατος, α being doubled to augment the negative sense) not to be desired, greatly to be feared or hated, sacred, inviolable, Il. ξ. 271. In Od. φ. 91. it is intentionally ambiguous, greatly to be desired, or very fatal in consequence of being desired: the suitors understood it in the first sense, Ulysses in the last.

ἄατος (for ἄτος, ᾱ being resolved into its constituents αα), greedy of, insatiable, Hes. θ. 714.

αλκω, f. αλξω—αλκεω, f. ησω, also αλαλκω, I repel, ward off—defend—support, protect, see Damm. 2741. fr. αλκεω. By changing λ into ρ, probably came αρκεω, which has the same sense.

αλκτηρ, ηρος, ὁ, a person who repels or wards off an attack—a protector, averter, Od. φ. 340.

ΑΛΛΑ, a conjunction, but—except—and—yet, nevertheless—moreover—on the contrary, no—however—well, be it so. But if we attend to the original meaning of αλλα, we shall find that in all cases it has but one acceptation. For it is the neuter plural of αλλος, taken adverbially, ANOTHER THING. Thus, "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but (αλλα) he who doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." Mat. 7. 21. Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, another thing, he who doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven. He who enters into the kingdom of heaven is a different thing from him who saith unto me Lord, Lord. And this solution will apply in all instances without exception. When a general or negative assertion is made, it is often followed by a limitation or exception. In these cases αλλα is used, and must be rendered by BUT, YET, EXCEPT, ON THE CONTRARY, NO, see Mark 11. 32. Mat. 19. 11; 20. 23. John 16. 20. Polyb. 4. 29. 4.—Further: In enumerating particulars, or in reasoning, another thing necessarily means something to be added to the particulars already mentioned; and then αλλα must mean AND, MOREOVER, BESIDES, EVEN. In conveying these senses, other particles are often added, such as αλλα και, αλλα μην, αλλα ου, or αλλα μη, and αλλα ουδε, αλλα ὁμως.—When a writer abruptly passes from one subject to another, he marks the transition in his thoughts by αλλα, as though he should say, "Enough of this, let us pass to another thing." This is the case when the writer is reasoning, commanding, supplicating, or asking a question; αλλα αγετε, Il. β. 72. "but come," as if he had said, "Enough of this," or, "To say no more, let us go." αλλα πειθεσθε, α. 274. αλλα ει τι δυνασαι, Mark 9. 22. "But if thou art at all able." In these and similar instances, which frequently occur, αλλα, or its corresponding but, might be omitted without any detriment to the sense, as its sole use is to mark the transition in the mind of the writer, and to summon the reader to follow him to the object which he has immediately in view. Thus αλλα often begins a new sentence, and stands detached from what goes before. It may further be observed, that a member of the sentence in which αλλα occurs is often elliptical, and the ellipsis must be supplied in order to render the sense complete. Thus αλλα ουκ Ατρειδη ηνδανε, Il. α. 24. This supposes τοις μεν αλλοις ηνδανε, the other Greeks hailed the priest, he having proved acceptable to them, but he was not acceptable to Atrides. So again in the next line, αλλα κακως αφισι, The Greeks welcomed him, Atrides did not; on the contrary, he ignominiously dismissed him. Σαπφους βαιαι μεν, αλλα ῥοδα, Meleager. 1. 6. There are few things of Sappho, another thing, (but) they are roses. "Though the pieces of Sappho are not many, nevertheless they are most exquisite and valuable." Τι γαρ βουλομενοι μετεπεμψασθ' αν αυτους; επι την ειρηνην; αλλα υπηρχεν ἁπασιν αλλα επι τον πολεμον; αλλα αυτοι περι ειρηνης εβουλευεσθε, Dem. 316. 17. "With what design did you assemble them? for peace? But peace subsisted among all? But for war? But you yourselves were deliberating about peace." Here the first αλλα supposes the question to be answered, No, not for peace, for another thing, peace subsisted among all. The second αλλα supposes the assertion to be made, We assembled them not for peace, we assembled them for a different thing, namely, for war. The third αλλα supposes the reply to be made, You assembled them not for war, you assembled them for a different thing, for you yourselves were deliberating about peace. This mode of solution shows that the distinctions made by Lexicographers and those (such as Viger, Dupert, and Hoogeveen) who have written on the Greek particles are for the most part erroneous and frivolous in the extreme. When αλλα is used with one or more particles, it always has the sense which it bears when used alone. Thus, when the poet says that though a king, in the day of the offence given him, may stifle his resentment, nevertheless (αλλα γε, Il. α. 82.), he still holds a grudge,—here αλλα has the usual sense of but, and supposes the clause to run thus: Though a king stifles his resentment, he does not extinguish it, αλλα εχει, but cherishes it. γε then is to be connected with εχει or κοτον in the sense of "certainly," or "at least." In line 113 Agamemnon asserts that he loved Chryseis as much as he did Clytæmnestra, even when she was a virgin; and presently adds, "but even thus," αλλα και ὡς, he wished to deliver her up for the safety of the people—nevertheless I wish to give her back.

ΑΝ, a conditional particle from ην resolved into εαν, which by excluding ε becomes αν, if—may, might—would, should—can, could—must.

This particle is used with all the moods except the imperative, and with every tense, though less commonly with the present and future indicative. The following remarks may serve to illustrate its meaning. αν being an abbreviation of εαν, the primary sense is if; as εαν τε κλαιης, αν τε μη, for εαυτε μη κλαιης, if you weep, and if you do not.—2. When ει expresses the condition if in the preceding clause, αν is introduced in that which follows in the sense of would or should. ει μεν ηρεσκε τι μοι των ὑπο τουτων ῥηθεντων, ἡσυχιαν αν ἡγον εἰδε μη, τουτ' αν και αυτος ἐπειρωμην ἁ γιγνωσκω, λεγειν, Dem. 40. if any of those things said by these orators satisfied me, I would have maintained silence; but if not, then I too would have attempted to express what I think. 3. Though αν necessarily implies condition, and is hypothetical, it is often intended to convey a positive or absolute sense. Thus ὡς αν μοι δοκῃ, as it may appear to me, is but a modest or unassuming way of speaking for ὡς μοι δοκει—ἑως αν ζῳ, while he may live, for while he lives—ὁν αν φιλησω, Mat. 26. 48, whom I may kiss, for whom I shall kiss—πιουα' αν χορευω, Anacr. 9. having drunk I may dance, for I dance—4. αν is often repeated with the same verb to render the condition or contingency the more prominent or emphatic. ἑδρασ' ἄν, εν τοῦτ' ἰσθ', ἄν, Œd. T. 1438, I would have done it, be assured, I would. ἀλκῇ δε σ' οὐκ ἄν, ᾗ σὺ δοξοζεις ισως, σωσαιμι ἄν, Orest. 703, I cannot save you, perhaps as you think, by main force, that I cannot. But when ἄν is repeated, it may take two different meanings, ὡσε σ' οὐκ ἄν αὐτὸν γνωριζαιμ' ἄν ειδων, Orest. 373, so that I should not know him if having seen him. νομισατε το τε φαῦλον και το μεσον και το παυ ακριβες ων ξυγκραθεν μαλιστ' ἄν ισχυειν, Thuc. 6. 18. be assured that the base, the middle, and the correct, if mixed together, would mostly prevail.—5. Though ἄν with a participle often takes the primary sense of if, its general effect is to impart to a past participle a future conditional sense. But this is owing to an ellipsis, it being necessary to repeat the preceding verb to render the sentence complete. Thus φρονιμος δε περι τοῦ συνοισειν μελλοντος πως ἄν τις τῳ ὀντι γενοιτο; δηλουοτι, ω παῖ, εφη, ὁσα χρεν εστι μαθοντα ειδεναι, μαθων ἄν, how can a man become really wise in things about to profit him? It is plain, my son, he answers, that whatever things it is lawful to know after having learnt them, he becomes thus wise by learning them; literally, having learnt them he would, i. e. he would become wise. μαθων ἄν γενοιτο φρονιμος, Xen. H. 2. 6. 19. In the sentence following this, ἄν, connected with the present participles πυνθανομενος and επιμελομενος, may be construed if learning, if mindful of. And here it may be laid down as a rule invariably true, that ἄν with a participle is equivalent to that participle changed to the optative with the implied subject in the nominative case. Thus in the instances above, ἄν ειδων bears the same import with ἄν ειδοιμι. ἄν ξυγκραθεν, with ἄν ξυγκραθειη. μαθων ἄν, with μαθοι ἄν. and ἄν πυνθανομενος, with ἄν πυνθανοιτο. Thus also in Demosthenes, p. 40. 2, επισχων ἄν means επισχοιμι ἄν, I would have restrained myself.—6. When εἰ or εἰ μη occurs in the following clause, ἄν is often omitted in the preceding one, see Il. π. 698, where ἑλον is for ἑλοιν ἄν, would have captured. ησχυνοντο for ησχυνοντο ἄν, they would have been ashamed, Æschin. c. Ctesph. § 5.

Finally, ἄν often coalesces with ὁτε, ὁποτε επει, επειδη, into, ὁταν, ὁπόταν, επειαν, επεαν, επαν, επειδαν, and in this combined state modifies the succeeding verb in the same manner as when separately used.

ΑΝΑ, or ἄν, preposition, governing the accusative, and in the poets, the dative. This preposition signifies medium or interval of time or place, answering to the Latin per, through, throughout, along. ανα στρατον, throughout the army, Il. δ. 209. δια—ανα νυκτα, through the night, in the night, or by night, ξ. 80.—ανα τον πολεμον, throughout the war, during the war—ανα μεσον, through the middle, in the midst, between, during, Mat. 13. 25. 1 Cor. 6. 5.—ανα μοιρος, through part, in part, by turns, alternately, 14. 27—back, answering to the Latin re, στρεψασκον ανα ὀγμους, Il. σ. 546, they turned back to the furrows—in, by, ανα στομα, through the mouth, in the mouth, mouth being the medium, Il. β. 250. ανα κρατος, through strength, by force, force being the means—ανα θυμον, through the mind, in the mind, Il. β. 36.—up, upon, on, ανα τον ποταμιον, up the river. ανα σκηπτρῳ, on the sceptre. ανα ναυσιν, on, or in, ships. ανα Γαργαρῳ ακρῳ, Il. ο. 152, on the top of Gargarus. ανα δ' ελατειοισι δικασσε ἑμολε, for ανεμολε, Iphig. A. 1059, a troop came up with spears or spikes of fir-tree.

ανα is often used adverbially, and then means a part, separately, each. ελαβον ανα δηναριον, they a part received a penny, they each or singly received a penny, Mat. 20. 9. ανα ἑκατον και ανα πεντηκοντα, Mark 6. 40, in ranks a hundred each and fifty each. ανα πεντε παρασαγγας τῆς ἡμερας, Xen. A. 4. 6. 4, they marched a part five parasangs in the day, i. e. they marched five each day.

In composition ανα has the sense of back, again, up, re, and is opposed to κατα.

ἄρἄ, αρ, (and by dropping α) ρα, lo, behold—therefore, then, accordingly—I say, I suppose or presume—namely, that is to say, to wit—perhaps, peradventure, by chance.

The particle αρα seems to have the same common origin with ὁραω: and as its use consists in inviting the attention of the reader to the subject of discourse as worthy of especial notice, its primary signification is that of LO, BEHOLD. Thus the flatterer in Theophrastus, Char. 2, on seeing his friend eating languidly, takes up a delicate bit, and adds, τουτι αρα ὡς χρηστον εστι! lo this, how excellent it is. αυταρ αρα ζευς δωκε διακτορω, &c. Il. β. 103. but lo! Jupiter gave it to Mercury. Under the figure of the sceptre Homer derives the power of Agamemnon from Jupiter, and as he wanted to render this idea prominent, he fixes the reader's attention by αρα. Again, και ὁ Κυρος λαων, εὐιδου τε αρα τοις παισι, και αμα ελεγεν· ω παιδες ὡς αρα εφλυαρουμεν ὁτε τα εν τῳ παραδεισῳ θηρια εθηρωμεν, Xen. Π. 1. 4. 11. and Cyrus took the presents; and lo! he distributed them among the boys, saying at the same time, See, boys, how we trifle when we hunt wild beasts in the park. Here the first αρα, lo, marks the consequence of the grant made by Astyages, and is precisely what we express by THEREFORE, ACCORDINGLY, THEN, igitur, ergo, proinde, and thus it should always be rendered when marking an inference in argumentative discourses. See Luke 11. 20. 1 Cor. 15. 15. Rom. 7. 21; 8. 1. The second αρα, as used above, is to hold forth the subject as evident, "see here how we trifle," &c. or "we trifle as you may see." Accordingly Sturzius not improperly, though widely, renders this by "ut patet." When Gobryas first presented his daughter to Cyrus, Xenophon, Π. 5. 2. 3, thus characterizes her: και τελος την θυγατερα δεινον αρα καλλος εχουσαν εξαγαγων, and last of all he brought out the daughter, behold! her possessing wonderful beauty. He brought her out the last as an object the most splendid of all, and crowning the whole. αρα therefore marks this effect, and is equivalent to VERILY, INDEED, sane, quidem. οιους αρα ἡμεις εχομεν εταιρους, Π. 2. 2. 3. lo! what comrades we have, such verily, or such, I say, are the comrades we have. Cyrus when a child paid homage to Sacas; and it is added, ὁ δε Σακας αρα καλος ων ετυγχανε, Π. 1. 3. 7. but behold Sacas was really very handsome. Here again αρα arrests the attention as giving the cause of the homage paid by the child, and may be rendered by SINCE, INASMUCH AS, THAT IS TO SAY, nempe, scilicet, nimirum. ποταμος ει μεν τις και αλλος αρα ἡμιν εστι διαβατεος, Xen. A. 2. 4. 3, behold if any other river is to be passed by us. In this passage αρα holds forth to attention the encountering of another river, as an event of ordinary occurrence, and therefore probable: it is here therefore equivalent to PERHAPS, PERADVENTURE, fortassis, forte.—If by chance we have to cross another river. When a writer wishes to be emphatic, he uses αρα to enforce his meaning. This use continually occurs in Homer. ὡς αρα φωνησας, Il. β. 35, lo having thus spoken,—having, I SAY, thus spoken, inquam. see also Il. α. 583. With this view, to enforce his similitudes, the same poet inserts αρα after ὡς, οιος, τοιος—ὡς αρα, thus, I say, Od. τ. 442. τοιον αρα, such, I say, Il. β. 482. βη δ' αρ' ονειρος, Il. β. 16, thus, I say, went the dream—βη δ' αρ' επ' Ατρειδην, it went, I say, on Atrides. It may not be unnecessary to repeat that in these and in all similar instances, the primary sense of lo! might be adopted—lo the dream went—lo it went on Atrides. And this is the more proper, as the intention of the poet's language is to fix the attention on the speed with which the dream executed his commission. στη δ' αρ' ὑπερ κεφαλης, 20. lo he stood over his head. The impetuosity here intended was well understood by Virgil, who thus expresses it, Æn. 4. 702, devolat, et supra caput adstitit.

ἆρα, an adverb of interrogation, for ἦ ῥα, whether, num, nonne, an. It is however worthy of remark, that ἆρα, though very rarely, assumes the sense of ἄρα. When Atossa in the play of Persæ, 345, asserts that Pallas protected her favourite city, the messenger replies, ἐς' ἆρα Ἀθηνῶν, ἐστι πτορθητος πολις, yes, and therefore the city of the Athenians is impregnable—that it is. see moreover Œd. T. 1395. Conversely ἄρα interrogatively in the sense of ἆρα, occurs in Œd. T. 1099. But these and such examples are, it may be presumed, only poetic license, to preserve the metre unviolated.

ΓΑΡ, (a conjunction) in fact, indeed, truly, then—for, because, wherefore.

The real signification of this particle is supplied only by its origin, which is the Persian kar-dan, to do, and which is the parent also of the Latin cur, and the French car. Hence the primary notion of γαρ is, IN FACT, INDEED, TRULY, THEN. Αυτος γαρ ὁ Ιησους εμαρτυρησεν, John 4. 44, and in fact—indeed—Jesus himself bore testimony. ὡς γαρ ὑπαγεις μετα τοῦ αντιδικου σου, Luke 12. 58, while you are indeed going with your adversary to the judge. τῷ γαρ Μωσῆ λεγει, in fact, to Moses he says, or to Moses indeed he says. Rom. 9. 15, εὐδοκησαν γαρ, 15. 17, they have indeed thought fit. ἡ γαρ ὑπανδρος γυνη, Rom. 7. 2, the wife is in fact—is indeed or assuredly—bound by the law to her husband while living. ου γαρ δια νομου ἡ επαγγελια τῷ Ἀβρααμ, Rom. 4. 13, in fact the promise was made to Abraham not by the law. τι γαρ κακον εποιησεν; Mat. 27. 23, and what evil in fact hath he done? αλλα γαρ τις εις, Acharn. 594, but who in fact are you?—who then are you?

From signifying in fact, γαρ came to express the cause of some circumstance preceding it—FOR, BECAUSE, THEREFORE, just as εργω, in fact, means in Latin (ergo) therefore. But it is to be remarked, that the sentence in such cases is very often elliptical. "Do you not know, brethren, for (γαρ) I speak to them that know the law," Rom. 7. 1. Here γαρ refers to a clause understood—"Do you not know, brethren"—I put this question because I speak to them who know the law. πως γαρ τοι δωσουσι γερας, Il. α. 123. "Thou, Atrides, art most avaritious, and thy avarice has prompted thee to make an impracticable request, for how shall the Greeks give thee a reward?" Sometimes in the rapidity of association, the writer gives his reason for a thing which he has not yet expressed; and the force of γαρ is to be observed only by new modelling the sentence, see Il. η. 328. Sometimes γαρ refers to a circumstance preceding at some distance. "And they said to themselves, who will roll away the stone from the mouth of the monument?—for (γαρ) it was very large," Mark 16. 4. The writer giving way to the impulse of his ideas, interposes the clause, "and having lifted up their eyes, they saw that the stone was rolled away." It is to be observed, that the Lexicographers, Damm, Schleusner and Sturzius included, from not knowing the primary and genuine sense of this particle, have assigned it a variety of senses which do not belong to it.

γαργαιρω, I abound with berries or pearls—abound, am full—have the brightness of pearls, shine, from the Heb. גרגר, gargar, a berry or pearl.

γαργαρα, ας, ἡ, a heap of berries, abundance.

εξωκεανιζω, navigate a remote sea, Polyb. 34. 4. 5.

εξωλης, ες, εος, c. ωλεσιεθρος, abandoned, desperate, adv. 193.—utterly destroyed, Herod. 7. 10. utterly, Pax, 1072. destructive, Plutus, 443.

εξωλεια, ας, ἡ, utter ruin. ωμνυε κατ' εξωλειας, he swore by destruction, he bound himself by the bitterest curses, Dem. 553. 17.

εξωμος, ου, ὁ, ἡ, bare-shouldered, unincumbered. see Biel.

εξωμις, ιδος, ἡ, a jacket used by menials, which being short and without sleeves left the arm and body free for labour, Vesp. 442.

εξωμιζω, f. ἰσω, I make bare up to the shoulders, Eccles. 267.

εξωμιας, ου, a menial, Luc. 1. 547.

εξωμιδοποιια, ας, jacket-making, Απ. 2. 7. 5.

εξωμοσια, ας, ἡ, denial on oath, Eccles. 1018. εξομνυμι.

εξωνεομαι, I buy out, redeem, Luc. 3. 352.

εξωνεῖται, are redeemed, compensated, Long. § 36. ωνεω.

ἐξωπίος, ου, out of sight, absent, Med. 623. gone out, Thesm. 888. ἐξ, ὠψ.

ἐξωρος, ον, beyond the bloom of youth, decayed, Luc. 1. 133.—unseasonable, S. Electr. 620. or rather ἐξωρα, here means things that ought to have been made sooner, late.

ἐξωριαζω, protract, loiter over, Prom. 17. This and not ενωριαζω is the true reading. ὡρια.

ἐξωστης, ου, ὁ, the driver out, expeller, an epithet of Mars as invading a country and expelling by violence its rightful inhabitants, Rhesus, 322. ἐξωθω.

ἐξωσμα, ατος, ejection, Thren. 2. 14.

ἐξωστρα, ας, (ἐξωθω) a machine to force out what is within, a pulley—stage, Polyb. 11. 6. 8. balcony. see Biel.

ἐξωτερος, α, ον, (comparative of ἐξω) outer, external. σκοτος το εξωτερον, that darkness which is on the outside of a place illumined in the night of a festival, darkness contrasted with light, and therefore intense darkness, Mat. 8. 12.—ἐξωτατος, superlative, the outermost, utmost, remotest, 3 Reg. 6. 30.

ἐξωτερικος, η, ον, on the outside, superficial. ἐξωτερικοι λογοι, the popular writings of Aristotle, in contradistinction to those called ακροαματικοι, which were composed more philosophically, and intended for his confidential disciples, Arist. Ethic. 1. 13.

ἐοικως, οτος, part. perf. m. of εικω, like, Il. α. 47.

ΕΟΡΤΗ, ης, ἡ, a festival, a holy day, Il. 1. 5. 1. the passover, Mat. 26. 5.

ἑορταζω, f. ασω, I feast, celebrate. ἑορταζειν ἑορτας, i. e. ἑορτας αγειν, to feast feasts, celebrate feasts, Plut. 2. 503. ἑορταζωμεν, 1 Cor. 5. 8, let us feast, let our passover be that truth and moral purity of which the literal passover is but the symbol. So Thucydides says of the Athenians, 1. 70. μητε ἑορτην αλλο τι ηγεισθαι ἡ το τα δεοντα πρᾱξαι, they look upon no other day as a festival in comparison with that when they succeed in what they ought to engage.

ἑορτασμα, ατος—ἑορτασμος, ου, ὁ, festivity, the celebration of a festival, Plut. 10. 531.

ἑορτασιμος, ἑορταστικος, η, ον, festive, joyous, Luc. 3. 394. ἑορταστικη ἡμερα, a festive day, Plut. 7. 93.

ἑος, ἑα, ἑον—ἑενς, gen. ἑῆος, his own, her own, their own. When a person of rank was accosted, to avoid the freedom of a direct address, ἑος, or ἑενς, was then used to signify thy. παιδος ἑῆος, of her own son, meaning thy son, Il. α. 393. Hence the analogy in Latin by which ille, ipse, &c. in Latin have their genitive illius, ipsius.

ΕΠΙ, a prep. governing the genitive, dative and accusative, and means upon, on—over, near, at—in, during—against, towards, for, to.

καθως, καθωσπερ, adv. as, inasmuch as, since—how, Acts 15. 14. κατα, ὡς.

ΚΑΙ, and—even, too, also, although, yet. This conjunction exists in Shanscreet in the form of κα attached to the end of words, hence que in Latin, and by transposition ac. But this in Greek is τε or δε, on the same principle that κεινος was changed into τηνος. By transposition τε is et or at; and hence και, que, τε, δε, ac, et, at, are shoots of the same original stem, namely, κα in Shanscreet.

In enumerating particulars, και is repeated whenever the writer wishes to be distinct and emphatic, see Il. 1. 4. 7; 6. 2. 5. On the contrary, it is omitted when he rapidly exhibits things to the imagination of the reader—For the sake of emphasis και is often preceded by τε. σοφοι τε και ευτυχεις, both wise and good, Il. 1. 1. 1.—και εν ἰδιοις οικοις, even in their own houses, Il. 1. 1. 1. και τῳ Πετρῳ, even to Peter, though he has recently denied me, especially to Peter, Mark 16. 7. και γαρ αυτοι, for we too, Luke 11. 4. και αυται, they also, themselves too, E. 2. 3. 12. There are many occasions in Greek where και is used, where the general drift of the writer would warrant the use of another particle in a translation, which particle is by no means in itself equivalent to και. Thus, και απεθανε και εζησε, Rom. 14. 9, he both died and lived, which may also be rendered, though he died, yet he lived. Και περι μεν τῶν τοτε πραχθεντων εχων ετι πολλα λεγειν, και ταῦτα ἡγοῦμαι πλειω τῶν ἱκανων εἰρησθαι, Demosth. for the crown, § 16. Though I am able to say still more concerning the then transactions, yet I think these spoken to have been more than sufficient. ουκ εστι γημας, ὁστις ου χειμαζεται, λεγουσι παντες, και γαμουσι ειδοτες, there is not one married man who is not harassed; all say so, yet (and) knowing it they marry. Και ὁ Αστυαγης ειπεν, and Astyages said—then he said, Il. 1. 3. 10. so it may be rendered by when in 1. 4. 28. see Acts 7. 6. Mat. 20. 18. και ουκ επεσε, and it did not fall, nevertheless it did not fall, Mat. 7. 25. ησαν γαρ πολλοι και ηκολουθησαν αυτῳ, Mark 2. 15, for there were many, and they followed him—though many, yet many as they were, they all followed—there were many who followed him. From these instances it appears that the general scope of a sentence may warrant for και the substitution of other particles, such as quum, tum—sed, vero, tamen, tametsi—ideo, itaque, saltem, post quam, and the like, yet these are none of themselves equivalent to it; and Lexicographers are erroneous in rendering it by such words. see Schleus. Sturz. and Damm.

On many occasions, and especially in the beginning of a sentence, και is used for the sake of emphasis or preserving the connexion, where its equivalent would be redundant in English. ὃς και εγενετο προδοτης, Luke 6. 16, who also or who even betrayed him, or simply who betrayed him. και αυτις, again, hereafter, Il. α. 140. τοτε και πρωτον, then first, Il. 1. 3. 9. και μαλιστα, most especially, 2. 1. 5.

και is often combined with other particles succeeding it. κἂν, for και εαν, and if, though, Λ. 1. 8. 8. και γαρ, και γαρ τε, for, etenim, Il. α. 63. και περ, although, Prom. 308. καιτοι, although, yet, 172. But in these and all other instances και retains its primitive sense, and may be resolved into it.

καασωρευω, I act the harlot.

κατα, for και ειτα, and thus, and then, and accordingly, O. 2. 4.

KATA, a preposition governing the genitive and the accusative: with the former κατα means down, against—with the latter even with, according, conformably to. But it signifies various other relations of time and place, which are deducible from these, and dependent on the meaning of the governed noun or the verb in the context.

κατα του κρημνου, Mat. 8. 32, down the precipice. καθ' ὁλης της περιχωρου, Luke 4. 14, down the whole region, along, through, per—κατα της κεφαλης, 1 Cor. 11. 4, down the head, over, super, see Il. ν. 321.—κατα θεου, down from God, in the name of God, by God, Mat. 26. 63. Heb. 6. 13. concerning God, of God, 1 Cor. 15. 15.—to bring down a complaint or accusation of a person as from a court on high, is to be against him. καθ' ἡμων, Rom. 8. 31, against us, see verse 33.—κατ' ορεσφιν, Il. λ. 493, for κατ' ορεων, down the mountains—ελουε με κατα κρατος και ωμων, Od. κ. 362, he washed me down my head and shoulders, he washed down my head and shoulders—ωρμηθη Ακαμαντος, sub. κατα, Il. ξ. 488, he rushed down upon Acamas, against—κατα θνητων ανθρωπων, down mortal men, down the race of men, from the first to the last amongst men, Od. ρ. 587.

With the accusative κατα signifies even with; and to be even with any time or place is to be in, at, opposite it. κατα καιρον τουτον, in this time, Rom. 9. 9. κατ' αρχας, Heb. 1. 10, in the beginning. γενομενος κατα τον τοπον, Luke 10. 32, being even with the place, being at the place. ηλθε κατ' αυτον, ver. 33, he came even with him, to him. κατα το μεσον, in the middle—κατα Κερκυραν, Thuc. 1. 46, opposite Corcyra—κατα το ευαγγελιον, directly opposite to the gospel, against, 1 Tim. 2. 10.—κατ' οφθαλμους, even with your eyes, before your eyes, Gal. 3. 1.—κατα τον νομον, Acts 24. 14, even with the law, according to the law, conformable to it—οι κατα φυσιν κλαδοι, Rom. 9. 21, the branches according to nature, the natural branches—καθ' ὁλην την πολιν, Luke 8. 1, even with the whole city, throughout the whole city. κατα το αυτο πνευμα, 1 Cor. 12. 8, according to the same spirit, by, through—κατα χαριν—κατα οφειλημα, Rom. 4. 4, as a favour, as a debt. κατα πασαν αιτιαν, even with every crime, in conformity to, for, Mat. 19. 3.—κατα τα εθνη, Acts 21. 21, even with the nations, throughout, among—καθ' ἑαυτον, Acts 28. 16, even with himself, by himself, alone, see Il. β. 366.—κατ' ἰδιαν, Mat. 14. 13, sub. χωραν, in private, privately—κατ' ετος, Acts 22. 19, even with the year, every year—καθ' ἑνα, 1 Cor. 14. 31, one by one. εἷς καθ' εἷς, for εἷς και εἷτα εἷς, one and then one, one by one—κατ' επος, even with a word, word for word, verbatim—κατα τι; why? wherefore? κατ' αμαξιτον, even with the waggon road, along it, Il. χ. 146.

κατα with its governed noun may often be rendered adverbially, κατα κρατος, by force, forcibly—κατα σπουδην, with haste, hastily—καθ' ὑπερβολην, through excess, excessively.

κατα is often separated from the verb with which it forms a compound. κατα οσσε ελαζε θανατος, Il. ε. 82, for κατελαβε οσσε θανατος—κατα πιονα μηρια ἑκηα, α. 40, for κατεκηα.

When κατα is thus separated, the final consonant becomes the same with the initial of the succeeding word. καδ δε μεσον, for κατα δε μεσον, Il. ι. 87.—καμμεσον, for κατα μεσον· καππεδιον, for κατα πεδιον, Il. λ. 166, on the plain; κακκεφαλην, π. 412, for κατα κεφαλην· καγγονυ, for κατα γονυ, υ. 458; καλλιπον, for κατελιπον· καλλαπαρην, for κατα λαπαρην, ξ. 617. καρ ῥα, for κατα ῥα· καδδαλε, for κατεδαλε· κακκειω, for κατακειω.

κατα is often understood, especially in connexion with adjectives. ποδας ωκυς, for κατα ποδας, swift of feet, Il. α. 58. την τεχνην σοφωτερος, wiser in art, for κατα την τεχνην, see Il. β. 478. 479. παντα, for κατα παντα, in all things. αρχην, for κατ' αρχην, at the foundation, altogether, omnine. But when accusative nouns accompany verbs or participles passive, it may seem more proper to consider them as governed by those verbs or participles on account of the reflex sense conveyed by them, than by κατα understood. δεδηγμαι καρδιαν, Acharn. 1, I have my heart bitten. αναιδειην επιειμενος, having put on impudence, having clothed thyself in impudence, Il. α. 149. ὁ επισευθην εγω, 1 Tim. 1. 11, which I have intrusted to me.

KATABAINΩ, καταβαω, f. ησω, καταβημι, aor. 2. κατεβην, I come down, descend, Il. γ. 252.—bring down—return, E. 5. 1. 22.

ΚΟΤΤΑΒΟΣ. ου, ὁ, a pastime of this nature. A piece of wood being erected, another was placed on the top of it, with two dishes suspended from each extremity in the manner of scales. Beneath each dish was a vessel full of water, in which stood a statue chiefly composed of brass, and called μανης. They who engaged to play at the cottabus, were said κοτταβιζειν· they stood at some distance holding a cup full of water or wine, which they endeavoured to throw into one of the dishes, that the dish by that weight might be knocked against the head of the statue under it. The person who threw in such a manner as to spill the least water, and to knock the dish with the greatest force on the statue was conqueror, and supposed to reign in the affections of his mistress, which was the thing to be learnt by this sport. The sound made by the projection was termed καταξη, and the liquid spilt καταγη. The action, as also the cup out of which the wine was cast, was called αγκυλη, because they turned round the right hand with great dexterity, and we read of κοτταβοι αγκυλητοι. The vessels were called κοτταβοι, or κοτταβιδες, and the prizes κοτταβια, or κοτταβειον, ου, τα, which were sweetmeats or kisses. The play itself, to distinguish it from others of the same sort was called κοτταβος κατακτος. The name seems derived from κοττη, or κοτις, ιδος, ἡ, the hind part of the head, see Robin. A. G. p. 542.

ΜΕΝ, (Heb. ן֣וֹא, amen, true, faithful, the parent of αμην, and by aphæresis, μεν, or μην) indeed. This particle supposes δε in a subsequent clause, or sometimes αλλα, or αυταρ, and marks an opposition to it. Thus Plato, Epist. 7. p. 95. βραδυτερον μεν, ἑιλκε δε με ὁμως ἡ περι το πραττειν τα κοινα και πολιτικα επιθυμια, the desire of engaging in the affairs of the state and of the city attracted me—slow indeed—but yet attracted me.

It would however be superfluous always to render μεν by indeed, as in a translation it may be superseded by laying an emphasis on the word going before, which it affects. Thus Demosth. for the Crown, sect. 55. ουκ ειπον μεν ταυτα, ουκ εγραψα δε· ουκ εγραψα μεν, ουκ επρεσ̔ευσα δε· ουκ επρεσ̔ευσα μεν, ουκ επεισα δε Θηβαιους, I did not counsel this alone, but not decree it; I did not decree it, but not undertake the embassy; nor did I undertake the embassy, but not prevail upon the Thebans—μεν is not followed by δε, when another particle succeeds it, as μεντοι, or μεν ουν; or when the writer has left the antithetic clause unexpressed. η σοι μεν ἡμεις πανταχη δηωτες Φιλοι, Antig. 645, or doing thus we are ever dear to thee. σοι μεν, opposed to αυτῃ δε ου, or some such clause understood—dear, indeed, to thee, though not to her—μεν is sometimes repeated when a clause is parenthetically inserted, so as to intercept the opposed members. και τον μεν καλεουσι Θερος τουτον μεν προσκυνεουσι τε και εν ποιουσι· τον δε χειμωνα καλουμενον, τα εμπαλιν τουτον ἑρδουσι, Herod. 2. 121. Here μεν in the first clause is opposed to δε in the third clause, and μεν in the second clause is opposed to δε in the last clause, but not expressed —The one they call summer, this indeed they worship, and respectfully treat; but the other is called winter, and this they treat differently.

ΜΕΝΟΣ, εος, το, the heart—desire, ardour of heart, strength, might, σθενος—courage, θαρσος—fury, violence, force, impetuosity, Od. ε. 478.—rage, ι. 457. blood, Ajax, 1430.—ἱερον μενος Αντινοοιο, σ. 34, the sacred majesty of Antinous. This word is in Shanscreet in the sense of heart.

μεριτης, ου, a partaker, Polyb. 6. 39. 13.

μεριτευομαι, I receive for my share, or I share, Job 40. 25.

μερμερος, ον, stupendous, splendid, admirable, surprising, Il. κ. 48. 284. 524. κακον μερμερον, a splendid evil, i. e. dazzling, overwhelming. Damm. c. 1483. derives the word from μερος, or μεμηριζω, and this derivation is sanctioned by Timæus, L. P. who explains it, ὁ δια πανουργιων φροντιδα τισιν εμποιων, p. 178. hence Ruhnken renders it by difficilis or morosus. But the real origin of the word is μαιομαι, to shine, and is connate with μαρμαρος, or μαρμαιρω. hence the Latin mirror, I wonder. Plato uses the term in the sense of σκετλιος, peevish, discontented. Lucian Lexiph. § 11. has μερμερου κακου, which may be rendered surprising, sudden, perplexing evil.

μερμηριζω, f. ιξω, I am divided in my mind, (for μερμεριζω, from μεριζω reduplicated) I am doubtful, solicitous—I deliberate, Il. β. 3. design, meditate, Il. ν. 17. plan, Od. τ. 2. 22.

Ο.

Ο, ο, the fifteenth letter, in numbers 70, subscribed 70,000.

ὁ, ἡ, το, the—this—who, which—he, she, it.

1. The article ὁ, and the relative ὁς, seem to have been originally the same, both being the offspring of the Hebrew article ה, he or hu. Hence Homer frequently uses the article in the sense of ὁς, or ουτος; as ὁ γαρ ἠλθε, for he came, Il. α. 11. την ου λυσω, I will not release her, α. 29. ἡν δια μαντοσυνην, την ὁι πορε, α. 72, on account of his skill in divination, which Phœbus gave to him.

2. The doctrine of the article, however difficult or comprehensive, may be stated in the following brief remarks. The article is prefixed to a noun singular or plural, to define the individual or individuals expressed by it, in contradistinction to other individuals of the same class—Or, taking the classes of things as so many individuals, the article prefixed serves to express one class or description of things, in opposition to other classes or descriptions. This is the generic sense of the article, which, though frequently occurring, is often mistaken as to its real force and propriety.—The article is prefixed to abstract nouns, and renders the qualities denoted by those nouns prominent as they stand in themselves, in contradistinction to other qualities.—The article prefixed to adjectives holds forth the qualities of those adjectives as prominent and emphatic.

3. The article is often prefixed to a noun descriptive of a person, in order to render prominent the character or office which he sustains; as Ιωαννης ὁ βαπτιστης, John the Baptist—that John who baptized, Mat. 3. 1. The poets, however, in using the article for this purpose, were sometimes compelled, for the sake of the metre, to separate it from the noun which it was intended to qualify. Thus, τον Χρυσον ητιμησ' αρητῆρα, Il. α. 11, for Χρυσον ητιμησε τον αρητηρα, he dishonoured Chryses the priest—one that was a priest, and that priest his own. το ποῖον ἑυρε τῆσδε φαρμακον νουσου; Prom. 248, for ποῖον —το φαρμακον what did he find to be the remedy of this disease?—what did he discover to be such as could remedy this disease?

4. The article is prefixed to an adjective when it was intended to render prominent the sense of that adjective. εγω ἡ ταλαινα, I the miserable one—I who am miserable. αγετε την γραυν, lead me, the old one—being one that is old, Hec. 59. ὁυτοι, ὁι ταυτην την φημην κατασκεδασαντες, ὁι δεινοι εισι μου κατηγοροι, Plat. Apol. Socr. p. 42, these who have disseminated reports of this kind are enemies to me such as are cruel—are my most cruel enemies.

5. The article is prefixed to an abstract noun when it is intended to mark the import of that noun, in contradistinction to some other quality. Thus, ἡ αγαπη, that which is benevolence in itself, and not that which assumes the appearance or the name of it—true or pure benevolence. see 1 Cor. 13. ουκ εκ χρηματων γιγνεται ἡ αρετη, Plat. Apol. Socr. p. 70, that which is virtue—the moral quality of virtue does not spring from wealth. περιεσται τῷ χρονῳ τῶν πολιορκουμενων, Dem. 14. 16, he will prevail over the besieged by length of time, if not by any other means. ου σι ὁ διδασκαλος; John 3. 10, art thou one that is a teacher?—dost thou profess the office of a teacher? ὁ προφητης σι συ; 1. 21, art thou one that is a prophet?—dost thou sustain the prophetic character? On this principle ὁ ανθρωπος may mean not merely the man or some individual man known as the subject of discourse, but also man, or mankind, in opposition to other creatures, or in opposition to God. Thus, αυτος γαρ εγινωσκε τι ἡν εν τῷ ανθρωπῳ, John 2. 25, for he of himself knew what was in the human character—"Men required a revelation to know the will of God; but Jesus did not need a revelation to know what was in man."

6. The article serves to connect a noun with another succeeding it in the genitive. απο θαλασσης τῆς Ιονων, Plat. Gorg. p. 76, from the sea, that of the Ionians—from the sea, which is that of the Ionians—from the Ionian sea. το φιλαμα το Κυπριδος, here the first το holds forth the promised reward to be a kiss, and nothing less; the second connects it with Venus, as the kiss of no ordinary person. "His reward shall be even a kiss, and that too a kiss of Venus." ὁι εγγυτατω γενους, scil. οντες, those who are nearest the family—the nearest relatives. The participle ων, serving to connect the article and its subject with time and place, is often understood. ἡ ανω πολις, scil. ουσα, the city which is above, the upper city: Καδμου τοῦ παλαι νεα τροφη, scil. τοῦ οντος παλαι, the young offspring of Cadmus who was formerly, of ancient Cadmus. Moreover, the noun which the article defines is often understood when it is obvious from the context what noun is meant. Ιακωβος ὁ τοῦ Αλφαιου, scil. υἱος, James, that of Alphæus, the son of Alphæus. On the same principle ἡ in such circumstances means ἡ θυγατηρ, the daughter. So το may mean this thing, word or subject—τα, scil. πραγματα, the things, the affairs.

7. The article is put with neuter adjectives to express abstract nouns; as το καλον, that which is beautiful, beauty. το αισχρον, that which is deformed, deformity. On this principle the neuter article is joined with an infinitive verb to express the action in the abstract, and thus, in fact, the verb is converted into an abstract noun; as το ειναι, the being; το εργαζεσθαι, the working, the operation.

8. The article is put with neuter adjectives to express adverbs. το πρωτον, or τα πρωτα, first, or at first. το λοιπον, that which remains, for the future, hereafter. το πρωι, in the morning, early. το παν, at all, altogether.

9. The article is often put with a participle to express the corresponding agent of the verb. ὁ λεγων, he who speaks, the speaker. οἱ γραψαμενοι, they who accused, the accusers, Aπ. 1. 1. 1.

10. The article in some cases is put for τις, as μεχρι τεο, or τοῦ, for μεχρι τινος, scil. χρονου, till what time, how long, Il. ω. 128. ης τῷ εὔχος ορεξομεν, ης τις ἡμεῖν, Il. μ. 328, either we shall give the victory to any one, or some one to us. The article moreover in the ablative case is sometimes used adverbially. τῇ γε ελθοντες, for ταὐτῃ ὁδῳ, in this way, Il. ζ. 435. Aγ. 1. 4. τῷ in this manner, thus, therefore, wherefore, accordingly, μ. 9. λ. 57.

11. Finally, the article with μεν and δε, conveys a distributive sense. ὁ μεν, the one; ὁ δε, the other. see A. 1. 10. 3. Il. μ. 130. τα μεν, some things, in part. τα δε, other things, in part, A. 4. 1. 11. τῇ μεν, on one side. τῇ δε, on the other, 4. 8. 8.

ὀα, adverb of grieving, weeping, O! alas, woe, heu!

ΟΑΡ, ρος, ἡ, contr. ὦρ, a concubine, wife, Il. ι. 327. hence whore.

οαριζω, f. ἰσω, converse as lovers, Il. χ. 127. imp. οαριζον, for ωαριζον, caress, woo.

οαρισμος, ου, ὁ, friendly talk, courtship.

οαριστης, ου, ὁ, a familiar friend. Minos is thus said to be honoured with the conversation and friendship of Jupiter, Od. τ. 179. Jovis consilio admissus.

οαριστυς, υος, ἡ, conjugal converse, familiar intercourse, Il. ξ. 216.

οᾶρος, ου, ὁ, converse, Nem. 7. 102.

ὀβαc, the ovation, triumph, Plut. 2. 449.

ΟΒΕΛΟΣ, ου, ὁ, a spit, Il. ι. 213.—a dart —a mark prefixed to a verse faulty or worthy of notice. The noting such a verse was called ὀβελιζειν, to mark with an obelus.

ουτοι, adv. no, truly, by no means, Plut. 64. ουτοι δυναμαι μη γελαν, I am not indeed able not to laugh, Ran. 42.

ουτος, αυτη, τουτο, see Gr. Gram. this, opposed to εκεινος, that. The Attic writers annex ι, ουτοσι, this fellow, Plut. 24. τουτι, for τουτο, this thing, Plut. 51. ταυτι, for ταυτα, these things. ουτος is often used in contemptuously accosting a person. ουτος, τι δρας; you, sir, what do you do? Plutus, 439. ιθ' ουτος, do you, sir, go. αυτη συ, you there, you mistress, Aves, 1199. ουτοσι παρειμι, here I am present, 316.—ουτος is often used by way of emphasis or opposition. και ουτοι, and they too, A. 4. 7. 6. και τουτο, or ταυτα, and that too, or and besides, especially, Ran. 1203. και ταυτα τεθνηκως, and that being dead, though he be dead, Plutus, 67.

ουτω, ουτως, ουτωσι, adv. thus, so, Mat. 6. 30. ουτω εχεις και συ, so you too have.

ουχ, for ουκ, before an aspirated vowel, not, nor, Plutus, 98. 138. ουχ ὁτι, not only, Aπ. 2. 9. 8.—ουχι, no, by no means, Il. 1. 3. 4.—whether? num, nonne. ουχι αμφοτεροι πεσουνται; will not both fall? Luke 1. 39.

ΟΦΕΙΛΩ, f. ελω—οφειλεω, f. ησω, I owe, am bound. οφειλω την υποσχεσιν, I owe a promise, am bound by a promise, Il. 7. 2. 8. ὁ οφειλομεν ποιησαι, Luke 17. 10, that which we ought to do, imp. ωφειλε, he ought, he should, it was fit he should, Heb. 2. 17. οφειλει, he ought, feels himself bound, 1 Cor. 5. 10. aor. 2. ωφελον, or οφελον, (either with ει, ειθε, αιθε, or without these) signifies a wish, utinam, because it is natural that a debt which is owed should also be paid. αιθ' οφελης ησθαι, if you should sit—O that you would sit—I wish you would sit, Il. α. 415. see also Il. γ. 40. αιθ' οφελον μειναι, if they would remain, I wish they had remained, ω. 254. Thus in all instances of this sort οφελον is to be rendered by utinam, and the infinitive succeeding and depending upon it, is to be rendered as if in the indicative of the same person with οφελον. This shows that the following instance is Helenistic, and not pure Greek. οφελον ψυχρος ειης, Rev. 3. 15, but should be οφελες ψυχρος ειναι, I wish you were cold. see more examples in Schleusner. see Damm. 643. οφειλομαι, I am owed. τα οφειλομενα, things due, debts, E. 1. 3. 7. μοι ευεργεσιαι οφειλεται, Thuc. 1. 137, kindness is due to me, I have a claim on your gratitude. οφειλεται πασιν αποθανειν, it is incumbent on all to die — death is a debt which all must pay.

τε, for σε, thee, Theo. 1. 5.

τε, or τ', and, both, also. This conjunction is always annexed to the preceding word, and serves not merely to connect, but to render the word affected by it prominent and emphatic. And to this purpose it contributes when it appears to be redundant, or incapable of being rendered in English. λυσομενος τε θυγατρα, φερων τ' απειρεσια αποινα, Il. α. 13, about to redeem his daughter, and bringing a vast ransom. αιθ' οφελες τε αγονος τ' εμεναι, αγαμος τ' απολεσθαι, Il. γ. 40, I wish you had been unborn (or if born)—to have died unmarried.—δεινος τε, αιδοιος τε, Od. θ. 22, both formidable and venerable. It is often followed by και. Ατρειδαι τε, και αλλοι, &c. Il. α. 17. οιδε τε και δεδαηκε, Od. θ. 134, he has been both inured to and learnt. The true origin of this particle is the Sanscreet cha, attached to the end of words. In the Doric dialect this has retained its genuine and original form, as ὁκα, ἀλλοκα, for ὁτε, αλλοτε, whence the Latins have derived their que: and this shows that κε or κεν, though used only for the purpose of affirmation or emphasis, is but another form of τε. The sense of κε or κεν is indeed, sane, profecto; but the contrast, force or fullness it imparts to the original, can hardly be rendered in English; as αλλ' ἠτοι κεινον μεν εασομεν, ηκεν ἀλωμι, ηκε Φυγοι, και κεν οι υπερσχοι χειρα Κρονιων, Od. ξ. 183, but let us leave him, whether he may be taken or whether he may have escaped, and the hand of Jupiter may have been held over him. It is worthy of remark, that τε is redundant after a variety of monosyllabic words or particles, as ὁ, ὁς, δε, γαρ, αρα, and that κε or κεν is used in a connection precisely similar. It may be added that τε has become an integral part of many other words, as ὁτε, when. τοτε, then. ενητε, as. εστε, while or as long as. ουτε, neither, nor. ὡστε, so as or so that. αλλωστε, especially.

ΥΠΟ, ὑπ', ὑφ', poet. ὑπαι, under. This preposition governs the genitive, dative and accusative. ὑπο γης, under ground. ὑπ' ὁπλοις, under arms. ὑπ' ουρανον, under heaven, Acts 2. 5.

With verbs of motion ὑπο governs the genitive, to mark the beginning of motion, and means from under, and the accusative, to denote the object or end in which it terminates. ὑπο χθονος ἡκει Φοιβοσδε, Hes. θ. 669, sent from under the ground to the light. νεοσσον τονδε ὑπο πτερων σπασεις, Androm. 441, you will tear this young one from under the wings. Απῆλθον ὑπο τα δενδρα, they went away under the trees, A. 4. 7. 6. ὑπ' αὐτα τα τειχη, Π. 5. 4. 20, to lead under the very walls. When a noun expresses the principle of subordination, or any specification of time and place to which the attention is directed forward, that noun is governed by ὑπο in the accusative rather than in the genitive or dative. εἰμι ὑπ' εξουσιαν, I am under authority, Mat. 8. 9. ὑφ' ἁμαρτιαν εἰναι, to be under sin, Rom. 3. 9. οὐκ ἐστ ὑπο νομον, αλλ' ὑπο χαριν, 4. 14, he is not under the law but under grace. ὑπο την συκην, John 1. 48, under the fig-tree. ὑπο τον ορθρον, under the dawn, near the dawn, Acts 5. 21.

To be under an action is to be at the bottom of it, to be the cause of it, just as the root which is under a tree is the cause of its growth. Hence ὑπο with a genitive signifies cause, instrument, motive. αἱ δ' ουσαι ἐξουσιαι ὑπο του Θεου τεταγμεναι εισι, Rom. 13. 1, the existing authorities are appointed from under God, are appointed by God, God being the cause or author of their appointment. τας Αμφιονιας λυρας ὑπο τυργος ανεστα, Phœn. 838, the tower rose from under the lyre of Amphion—rose by means of his lyre, the lyre being the cause of it. ὑπο σαλπιγγος ἠξαν, S. Elect. 711, they started from under the trumpet—they started by means of the trumpet, started at its sound. ὑπο μαστιγων ωρυσσον, Herod. 7. 21, they dug under the whips, by means of the lash, the lash being the cause of their digging. ὑπο Φορμιγγων χορευειν, to dance under the lyre, under the direction of the lyre, to the lyre, Hes. α. 280. ὑπο θηρας, by means of hunting, from a desire of hunting, hunting being the source or motive. ὑπο τοῦ Φθονου ουκ ἐσιγων, E. 3. 4. 8, they were not silent by means of envy, on account of envy, envy being the cause of their not being silent.

φαραγγώδης, full of caverns, Plut. 7. 177.

φαρέτρα, ας, ἡ, a quiver, Il. α. 45. pharetra. The origin of this word is curious. It is the Heb. חֵץ, which in the form חֵרֵר became the Persian tēr, a thing thrown, an arrow, hence τειρω, to pierce. The Celtic is taro, to strike. The termination τρα, then, is the Persian tcir, arrow, and φαρέτρα, for φερετρα, from φερω, is the arrow-bearer. The verbal noun in Heb. is תּוֹרָה, the law of God, which therefore means a system of moral principles, that, unlike human laws resting on the surface, penetrate the heart. Hence the word of God is said to be more penetrating than any two-edged sword, Heb. 4. 12. It may be observed, that our quiver and quiver are the Heb. כָּבַר, to cover.

Φαρισαῖοι, ων, οι, Pharisees, a sect among the Jews who professed to explain the law of Moses, fr. פָּרַשׁ, to expound or unfold.

χαλινωτήριον, ου, the cable, Hec. 537.

χαλικραίος—χαλίκρητος, ον, said of wine. The Scholiast on Apoll. 1. 473, says, that the Athenians called wine χαλις, probably from χαλάω, as relaxing or enervating the mind; but such a compound is not natural, and seems a corruption of χυλικρητος, which means the mixed juice of the vine, or wine enriched with spices, from χυλος, juice, and κεράω, to mix. It is not unlikely that χαλις itself was a vulgarism for χυλος: nor is it unlikely, moreover, that κάλιξ, whence our chalice, is of the same origin as a cup in which the juice of the vine was mixed.

χαλίξ, ικος, a little stone, pebble, gravel, Aves, 840. Job 8. 17.

χαλίφρων, ονος, ὁ, ἡ, relaxed in mind, heedless: χαλαὼ φρην, Od. τ. 530.

Rom. 7. 3, she will act as an adultress, she will hold herself forth—will be deemed or called an adultress, on the authority of the divine law. ἐγένετο χρηματίσαι πρῶτον ἐν Ἀντιοχείᾳ τοὺς μαθητὰς Χριστιανούς, Acts 11. 26, It came to pass that they first held forth by an edict the disciples as Christians—stigmatized them by a decree of the council as the disciples of a crucified malefactor. The cause of this decree is brought to light by Josephus. The Jews at Antioch were divided into two parties, those who supported, and those who opposed, the gospel. Among the latter was Antiochus, a Jew, who, being in power, convened the people of the city, and publicly accused the party opposed to him, and his own father in the number, with the design of burning the city. But wishing not to involve those of his countrymen who agreed with him in this accusation, he gave the disciples the name of Christians, thus branding them under this new name as heretics and incendiaries. Compare Josephus B. J. 1. 7. c. 3. 3. with Acts 11. 20. It was for this reason that the Jewish believers, with the apostles at their head, never assumed the name of Christians. Nor does that appellation occur in the New Testament but thrice, and that as the subject of discourse, see Acts 26. 28. 1 Pet. 4. 16. Acts 11. 26.—χρηματίζομαι, I do business for myself, gain, enrich myself, H. 3. 3. 4. traffic, negotiate, confer with, Herod. 3. 118.—receive an answer, am warned by an oracle, Heb. 8. 5.

ων, Ion. for ουν, therefore, supposed to be redundant in some places, as in Herod. 1. 34. 49. 58.
ων, ουσα, ον, gen. οντος, (part. of ειμι, I am) being, existing. μαλα μεν κακων, υιος εοντος, αλλων δημον ικεσθαι, Od. ν. 218, it was very base, the son existing—while the son existed or lived—to go to the community of other men. This participle is very frequently used in all authors; and its object is to mark some circumstances of time, place, cause, similitude or opposition; and in order that its import should be fully expressed in English, it must be changed into its corresponding verb with while, when, though, or the like, prefixed. Thus Æschines against Ctesiphon. § μγ. Αξιω δε καγω τα επη, δια τουτο γαρ οιμαι ημας, παιδας οντας, τας των ποιητων γνωμας εκμανθανειν, ινα, ανδρες οντες, αυταις χρωμεθα, I will quote the verses: for it was for this reason, I think, that we being boys—while we were boys—learnt out of book the sentiments of the poets, that being men—when we are men—we might cite them.

The participle ων denotes something true or real, and thus stands opposed to verbs that signify to appear, to profess, to think, such as δοκω, φαινομαι, νομιζω, καλεω, &c. Ειμεν γαρ μη σχεδην, αλλα την Μυσων λεαιναν καλουμενην την Ελλαδα ουσαν οφθηναι, ζωντων Αθηναιων και οντων, περισιργασμαι μεν εγω περι των τοιουτων επων, Dem. 248. 25, if indeed it was not fit that Greece, while really Greece, should appear what is called a Mysian prey, (i. e. an easy unresisting prey to Philip) while the Athenians lived and were really so, (and were really worthy of that name) I have trifled in speaking of these things. το ισχυρον, μη οντα, δοκειν, Απ. 1. 7. 4, his appearing strong, while he is not really so. see Gal. 6. 3. Hence as ων implies truth or reality, the adverbial forms ὀντως, τῷ ὀντι, mean also in truth, reality, Ap. 4. 2. 39. τὸ ὄν, that which is, substance, matter, Ap. 1. 1. 145 τὰ ὄντα, the things which are, existing things, nature or the universe, 4. 6. 1. τὰ ὄντα, things which are true. ἀληθεύσαι τὰ ὄντα τε ὡς ὄντα, καὶ τὰ μὴ ὄντα ὡς οὐκ ὄντα, A. 4. 4. 10, representing with truth things which are as they are, and things which are not as they are not:—τὰ ὄντα, things which are to a man, his substance, property, goods, Ap. 2. 4. 2. τὰ ὄντα, scil. γενη, those that are—are of importance or distinction, the nobles, 1 Cor. 1. 28. opp. to τὰ μὴ ὄντα, that are obscure or mean.—τὰ ὄντα, things present, opp. to τὰ μέλλοντα, things to come; Σ. 4. 47. hence ὁ ὤν, he who is ever present, who fills all time and space with his presence, the eternal, immutable Jehovah.

As the participle ὤν has no peculiar form to express the past time, it is used sometimes to express the past, as in Il. α. 70. τὼ πρό τε ἐοντα, things which are before, past things or events. τυφλος ὤν, ἀρτι βλεπω, being blind, now I see—though I was actually blind, I now see, John 9. 25. From the want of a past tense in this participle, arose the incorrectness observable in the following passage. ὁ ὤν, καὶ ὁ ἦν, καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος, Rev. 1. 4, he who is, and was, and is to come. Here, instead of saying ὁ πρὸ ὤν, as Homer has done, this writer chose to change the participle for its verb in the past tense, καὶ ὁ ἦν.

The participle ὤν is often used instead of the infinitive. Thus, σοῦ πλειονος ἀξιος ὢν ἐφάνην τῇ πατρίδι, Dem. 288. 22, being of more value than thee to my country, I appeared so, i. e. appeared to be and was actually so. διατελεῖ εὔνους ὢν τῷ δήμῳ, Dem. 242. 21, being actually well disposed to the people, he continued so—he continued to be well disposed to the people. From these examples, it appears, that ὤν denotes a real state of being, and the concomitant verb an action or event consequent on that state; as οὐδ' αἴτιος ὢν φανήσομαι, nor being the cause shall I appear so in consequence—I shall not appear to be really the cause. εἰ μὲν ἐλαττους ἐποιησα τὰς δυναμεις, παρ' ἐμοι τἀδικημ' ἂν εὐσεικνυεν ὤν, Dem. 305. 11, if I diminished the resources of the state, wrong being on my side, he would have proved so—he would have proved that wrong actually existed on my part. When ὤν is joined with τυγχανω, as is often the case, its real force is best expressed in English by really, true. φιλος τυγχανει ὤν, he is really a friend. ὅσοι αὐτῶν φυγάδες τοτε ὄντες ἐτυγχανον, Ag. 2. 2. as many of them as were then real slaves, or happened to be slaves.

ΩΝΕΟΜΑΙ, f. ησομαι, I purchase for myself, buy, Acts 7. 16. A. 7. 2. 20. h. venale—procure by bribes, corrupt, Dem. 96. 7.

ωνη, ης, ἡ, purchase, Πο. 3. 12. ωνῃ τε καὶ πρᾶσει χρεωνται, they employ themselves in buying and selling, Herod. 1. 153.

ΩΟΝ, ου, το, an egg, ovum, Mat. 11. 12.

ωοειδης, ες, oval, Plut. 9. 511. εἰδος.

ωοκατάξις, an egg-cracker, a cook. see note on Luc. Lexiph. 9. fr. αγω, to break.

ωοτοκος, ου, oviparous—ωοτοκεω, I produce eggs, Plut. 8. 524.—ωοτοκια, ας, the producing of eggs, 8. 527. fr. τικτω.

ωοφυλακεω, guard the eggs, Plut. 10. 85.

ωπη, ης, sight, view, Apoll. 3. 819. ωψ.

ΩΡΑ, ας, ἡ, (from the Heb. אור, light) beauty, grace, Plut. 6. 39.—season of the year, or an hour of the day as marked out by the light of the sun, A. 1. 4. 10. John 1. 40. ωρα νεα, a new season, the spring, Equit. 417. ες τας ὡρας, for seasons hereafter, Ran. 383. οὑτως εν ὡρᾳ, thus in season, thus early, Eccles. 395. μη ὡρας (for εις ὡρας) ἱκοισθε, Lys. 1036, may you not come, may you not live for seasons, i. e. may you soon perish—ὥραι, the hours who watch at the portals of heaven to open and shut them for the sun, Il. ε. 749.

ωρια, or ουρια, watching, vigilance, care, solicitude, Trach. 57. Hes. ε. 30. whence also is ουρος, ου, ουρευς, a watch, keeper. hence too θεωρος, one who attends on the god of day, i. e. Apollo. θεου ουρος.

ωρᾰγος, for ουραγος, one who commands or leads the rear. ουρα, αγω, Il. 3. 3. 19.

ὡραῖος, α ον, graceful, beautiful, Theo. 1. 109.—fair, Mat. 23. 27.—seasonable, gathered in season, Hes. ε. 32. ὑπο ἠρι ὡραιον, at the commencement of spring, Polyb. 3. 16. 7.

ωραιοτης, ητος, ἡ, comeliness, beauty, grace, Ps. 95. 6. Ezek. 16. 14.

ὡραιοω, f. ωσω, I render graceful, impart beauty or perfection to. ὡραιοομαι, I am graceful or elegant, Cant. 7. 6.

ὡραϊζομαι, I decorate myself, Luc. 2. 440.

ὡραϊσμος, ου, grace, beauty, Jer. 4. 30.—embellishment, Plut. 1. 675.

ὡρακιαω, fade as the light, faint, Ran. 484.

ὡρῖκος, or ὡρῖμος, η, ον, fair or in season for a husband, mature, Achar. 271.—ὡρικῶς, adv. opportunely, or gracefully, Plutus, 964.

ὡριος, α, ον, limited to a certain season, stated, Pyth. 9. 173.—in their season, Od. ι. 131.

ωρεγομαι, I wish to engage in or undertake an expedition, Polyb. 5. 54. 3.

Ωρἰων, ωνος, ὁ, a person loved by Aurora on account of his beauty, Od. ε. 121. 309, but slain by Diana for his superior skill in hunting; or, in the language of fiction, for attempting to violate her, he being an extraordinary hunter. Orion was thence conveyed to the sky, and made a constellation, and was perhaps called Ωριων from his moving with grace, lustre and rapidity, ὡρῃ ιων; and in ridicule of this idea the Hebrews called him כְּסִיל, the foolish or sluggish star, Job 28. 31. Is. 13. 10.

ωργασμενος, ripened, softened—see οργαζω, and Lex. Plat. p. 179.

ADDENDA ET MUTANDA.

Under ἀγγελος, column 11, should be added, διὰ τους ἀγγελους, 1 Cor. 11. 10, on account of the angels, i. e. on account of violent and corrupt men supposed to be possessed and actuated by evil angels. The posterity of Cain having forsaken God, and presuming on their longevity, pretended to be Gods, or, in the language of Moses, began to call themselves by the name of Jehovah, Gen. 4. 26. This was the origin of idolatry, and the historian was going to state the destruction of mankind as the consequence; but he digresses to trace that branch of the descendants of Adam who remained in the knowledge and worship of the true God, and then returns to the subject. "Then men began to call themselves by the name of Jehovah, i. e. pretended to be Gods immortal and immutable on the earth. And it came to pass, when men began to multiply on the earth, and daughters were born unto them, that the sons of the gods saw the daughters of men, (i. e. men in low life) that they were fair, they seized them for wives, each choosing whomsoever he liked. And the Lord said, My breath shall not for ever continue in man, (this is the rendering of the Septuagint, the Chaldee paraphrase, the Syriac and Arabic versions, and even the Latin vulgate) for he is but flesh, and his days henceforth shall be but a hundred and twenty years." Which means, "These men pretend to be gods, and to possess the principle of life and immortality in themselves independently of me, though they are but mortal and corrupt men; I will therefore shorten the period of their existence, in order to cut off the ground of their presumption, and to punish them for their folly and impiety."

The Jews considered angels as employed under God in the administration of the world; and as they were called sons of God, see Job 1. 6, it was concluded that Moses in this place meant angels who became evil by falling in love with the fair daughters of men; meaning of course that as they were incorporeal spirits, and as such incapable of commerce with flesh and blood, they entered into the bodies of men, and thus rendered them impure and violent. The Apostle Paul correctly understood the language of Moses: and his words are to this effect: "The tyrants and oppressors of old, who go under the name of 'sons of gods, or angels,' laid violent hands on those females that came within their view. For this reason let every woman wear a veil, lest she should expose herself to some such persons in the present day, who by force or intrigue, by wealth or power, may lead her astray. This caution is peculiarly necessary in such a city as Corinth, where debaucheries prevail even to a proverb, and where men of opulence and rank collect from all parts of the world to procure women by money or violence, and carry them away." see Κορινθος.

Column 14. Under ἀγκἄθεν, upon, over, add, in the arms, for κατ' ἀγκας, Eum. 80.

Column 15. Under ἀγκλινω, add, I open. ἀγκλινας, having opened, Od. χ. 156.

Column 17. Under ἀγλαϊα, add, crest, insolence, Od. ρ. 244.

Column 72. ἀκρἀγης, ες, has been overlooked, it is said of vultures that do not scream, dumb or ravenous dogs, Prom. 809. fr. α, κραζω.

Column 188, insert ἀντιδιαπλεκω, a pugilistic term to return the attack of an adversary, grapple with in return, retort, rejoin, Æschin. § 17. p. 17.

Column 335. ἀχρεῖον δ' ἐγελασσε, Od. υ. 162, does not mean she laughed gently or faintly, but she laughed without the use or command of her organs, i. e. she laughed unconsciously, involuntarily, or unnaturally. This same idea is thus expressed in Od. ν. 347. οἱ δ' ἠδη γυαθ-μοῖσι γελωων (for εγελῶν, contr. of εγελαων) αλλοτριοισιν, they laughed with jaws not their own, i. e. with jaws of which they had not the use or command, with involuntary or unnatural jaws. From this σαρδανιον γελασσε differs, as meaning a laugh of malignity or a grin that betrays gall at heart.

Column 384. γεροα, ων, τα, booths or huts as places to shelter. hence γερον, a thing to cover or shelter in war, a shield. Its origin is the Hebrew גור, to sojourn, tarry—hence it means a place to tarry or shelter in, though the form for this sense is מגורה, hence the word megalia by changing r into l, which may be gathered from Virgil, Æn. 1. to be of Phœnician origin. see Dem. 284. 24.

Column 422. δημιουργος means properly a worker for the people or community, which was the real character of a minister of state. hence it came to denote a magistrate or public officer, Dem. 280. 3. and this is its sense in Od. ρ. 383. which passage is mistaken by all the commentators of Homer. Τις γαρ δη ξεινον κ̔αλεει αλλοθεν αυτοςεπελθων αλλον γε. ειμη, scil. ει μη τις, τῶν οἱ δημιουργοι εασιν, μαντιν η ιητηρα κακῶν, η τεκτονα δουρων η και θεοπιν αοιδον, ὁ κεν τερπηαι αειδων, which means, For what person indeed himself having come from elsewhere, i. e. himself a stranger —what person I say, except one of those who are magistrates, that is, men of authority, can invite a stranger (to a civic feast)—and he too can only invite a seer, a healer of evils, (a physician) an artist, a divine bard who delights by singing.

Column 463. The origin of δικη is the Heb. לכד, ל being changed into ד, to bind: thus religio means that which binds, from ligo, to tie; and δει, it is necessary or fit, from δεω, to bind. δικη then denotes the principle of moral obligation, which is justice. In Od. σ. 274, it signifies custom, usage, institution, which it is binding on a man to comply with. Aristotle, who teaches that virtue and justice are but means between two extremes, namely, defect and excess, supposes that δικη came from διχα, in two parts, but this is only one of many instances wherein the ancients wrested the origin of a word to support a fable or a system.

Column 520. Under ειμι, I am, should be inserted, εστιν ἁ, there are those things which, elliptically, some. εστιν ἁ των ψηφισματων παρεδην, I passed by some of the decrees, Dem. 298. 11. εστιν ἁ χωρια, some places or parts, Thuc. 1. 12.

Column 588. ενναται, ων, scil. κτεριεα, means the funeral rites performed to a deceased person on the ninth day. see note on Æschines against Ctesiphon, § πζ. P. 113.

Column 605, insert εξαραομαι, inf. εξαρᾶσθαι, to rescue from under a curse by certain rites, i. e. to consecrate, Æsch. contra Ctes. § λη. p. 56.

Column 699, insert μη εργολαβειν, not to traffic, Æsch. § ιδ. p. 19.

Column 942, insert κεν, indeed, truly, sane, profecto. This particle may be thought to be the Heb. כן, as it seems nearly allied to it in sound and sense; but in reality κεν is for κε, which is another form of τε, or que in Latin. see τε.

Column 1067, add, μετα, in Od. φ. 93, as the sense of μετεστι, is among us, is present.

Column 1084. μεσσειμι, I am in the middle. μεσσειν την αρχην, being in the middle of his public office, Æschin. § ι. p. 15.

Column 1106. under μαστοιε, read bosom, instead of bottom, as the sense of κολπος.

Column 1146. νεποδες is not from νη and ποδες, having no feet, but from νεος and ποδες, having new feet or young feet—having young, vigorous, unwearied feet, ever-moving feet, scil. immortal, Theo. 17. 25.—From signifying young, the term came to mean offspring, as in Od. δ. 404. hence Negus, a descendant.

Column 1341, insert, πολεμαω, f. ησω, I visit, ravage with war—excite to war. επολεμουντο, they were hostilely treated, Dem. 240. 24. This verb differs in sense from πολεμεω, or πολεμιζω, which mean I am in a state of war —I wage war.

Column 1487. συγγραφη, in Dem. 268. 13, means the description or model given by a person with a piece of marble, in order to direct the artist as to the dimensions of the intended statue.

Column 1587. τριγλυφοι, ων, τα, may mean three grooves engraved parallel with each other on the architrave of a pillar.
